Dear Dr. McAllister:

As you know, our First Summer Neuropeptide Conference was blown away by Hurricane Bob. However, the participants urged us to reconvene this August as the concept of a conference devoted to the latest neuropeptide research evoked great enthusiasm. I think this positive response to our misfortune emphasizes the need for such a conference.

I am enclosing our program. As you can see, we have excellent representation of important topics in neuropeptide research, and the speakers are all of the highest reputation. All the chairs have committed themselves to organizing the symposia as listed. Each symposium will be allotted 3 hours and will consist of 4 to 6 speakers, allowing for ample time for lively discussion. There will be no parallel sessions so that all registrants may participate fully in the entire program. We anticipate a most productive meeting.

In order to attract younger scientists, who are the backbone of neuropeptide research, we are keeping the costs as low as possible but we will still need financial support in order to contribute to the travel and per diem costs of the invited speakers. It would be much appreciated if you would help us again by your support of this conference. We would, of course, acknowledge your generosity in our program.

Sincerely yours,

Fleur
